

The Dark Enlightenment: Jung, Romanticism, And The Repressed Other

by D. J Moores

Book Review of "The Dark Enlightenment: Jung, Romanticism and the Repressed Other" by D. J. Moores. Published by Fairleigh Dickinson University Press, 2010. The book explores the relationship between Jungian psychology, Romanticism, and the concept of the repressed other. It discusses how the dark side of the psyche is often projected onto others, leading to a distorted view of reality. The author argues that this process is central to understanding the human condition and the creative process in art and literature.

Key themes and concepts discussed in the book include:

- The dark side of the psyche and its projection onto others.
- The relationship between the conscious and unconscious mind.
- The role of the shadow in Jungian psychology.
- The concept of the "repressed other" and its impact on human behavior.
- The connection between Romanticism and the dark side of the psyche.
- The importance of the "dark shadow" in the human psyche.

The book is a comprehensive study of the dark side of the human psyche and its impact on the world. It is a must-read for anyone interested in Jungian psychology, Romanticism, and the human condition. The author's clear and concise writing style makes the book accessible to a wide range of readers. The book is available in PDF format for download and reading online.
